For Immediate Release

The Psychological Society of Ireland welcomes Sheila McClelland as new CEO of CORU

The Psychological Society of Ireland (PSI) is delighted to extend a warm welcome to Sheila McClelland as the new Chief Executive Officer (CEO) of CORU.

The PSI anticipates that Ms McClelland's extensive experience, and proven leadership in healthcare regulation, will contribute significantly to CORU's mission of protecting the public through promoting high standards of professional conduct, education, training, and competence among health and social care professionals.

PSI CEO Sheena Horgan commented: "As the professional body representing psychologists in Ireland, the PSI is dedicated to advancing the profession and promoting the psychological wellbeing of individuals and communities. We look forward to our continued collaboration with CORU and Ms McClelland as its CEO, to ensure that the regulation of psychological practice meets the growing and evolving needs of the public, with their protection, through the maintenance of the highest standards of professional excellence, at its core. Aligned with this, the PSI will continue to remain vigilant to our strategic priority of upholding the integrity and excellence of psychological practice in Ireland."
